

Sexual discrimination

Sexual discrimination is unethical and is still an issue of concern in today's world. Regardless of which part of the world we observe, women will still be in a disadvantaged position. This is a complicated social problem and, moreover, it is unethical. Discrimination of any type and in any form is improper and should not be tolerated. Sexual discrimination shows special work conditions based on whether you are a man or a woman. Taking into consideration that we live in a perfect world, sexual discrimination should not be a social problem of our time, but we obviously do not live in a perfect world because gender discrimination is still present in the workplace. It is common knowledge that many women experience sex discrimination in the workplace. Sex discrimination also includes unwilling sexual advances, demand for sexual favors and other verbal or physical harassment of a sexual nature.

One might object to this argument on the basis of limited occupational choices for women and men. For example, professions such as nurses, teachers, and shop assistants tend to be dominated by women, while such occupations as construction builders, drivers, and football players tend to be dominated by men. Employment of women and men in different occupations is also linked to sex discrimination. Nevertheless, these kinds of occupations coincide with moral attitudes. This is known as an 'occupational requirement'. Men can do hard work, and women can have a pregnancy leave. This cannot be changed, whether someone likes it or not. This is just the way it is and is not related to sexual discrimination in any way.

Sexual discrimination at the workplace is not only unethical but completely unacceptable. For example, there are a lot of people that might think a woman should not be the boss of a group of men because she does not have enough influence. But it is a misbelief, moreover, it is old-fashioned. It has been proven that women are physically and mentally stronger than men. The problem is that men are not willing to accept this fact. Moreover, we have examples of women being football players, hockey players, and drivers. It is not true that these occupations fit only for male workers.

Discrimination at the workplace means subjecting an employee on the basis of reasons such as gender to behavior or treatment that puts women/ men at disadvantage or causes physical or mental discomfort. It is unethical because men and women are equal and both should have equal rights. Women and men, have the right not to be discriminated against at work because of their sex.

Ethics plays a very important role; it addresses duty, obligation, fairness, justice, altruism, and moral responsibility. Sexual discrimination is unethical because it negates all of the above-listed words; there is no more duty, obligation, fairness, justice, altruism, and moral responsibility. All these notions are lost. Discrimination is everywhere. Being discriminated is wrong; moreover, women have been fighting with sexual discrimination through centuries.

Discrimination at the workplace is unethical, besides it is illegal. In addition, workplace discrimination is also likely to impact employee morale, motivation and the goodwill of a company adversely. Equal rights in a perfect world that is what we all need.